Background

2023 was the deadliest year on record for migrants. Nearly 60 per cent of deaths were linked to drowning. The Mediterranean crossing continues to be the deadliest route for migrants, with at least 3,129 deaths and disappearances in 2023. This is the highest death toll recorded in the Mediterranean since 2017. This situation has led a variety of civil society organisations to define the Mediterranean Sea not only as the cemetery of Europe, but also as a crime scene, where international law is violated and life-saving activities are often obstructed or criminalised. Search and Rescue (SAR) NGOs play a crucial role in filling the gap left by many states for a proactive SAR mechanism. However, they are often not recognised as humanitarian NGOs, and they are not recipient of institutional funding. In response to this, some humanitarian NGOs have developed partnerships with SAR NGOs, and others call for an end to the obstruction of civil SAR activities in the Mediterranean. Recognising the urgency in addressing this scenario, humanitarian actors will be brought together on the eve of the World Refugee Day, to discuss this situation at European borders.

Objectives of the panel debate

- Open the debate on the Mediterranean Sea as a humanitarian space or a migration space, to reflect on roles and responsibilities of a variety of actors;
- Explore the collaboration between SAR NGOs in the Mediterranean Sea and the broader humanitarian sector;
- Reflect on the linkages between the criminalisation of SAR NGOs in the Mediterranean Sea and the lack of institutional funding and recognition.
